Beach costumes continue to satisfy the feminine predilection for the masquerade. A few yards of gayly printed chine or coarsely woven cotton, made into a full, pleated and long skirt and worn with a little shoulder shawl, transform yesterday's pirate into a French peasant; or the rollicking farmerette becomes with the aid of slender pajamas an houri of the harem. But beach coats are tending toward the severely practical, as witness the stitched linen coat, made like the masculine bathrobe and lined with absorbent eponge.
